

— Celebrating America's 250th Anniversary —

The Revolution's Impact on Long Island

Please join us as we welcome Dr. Jennifer Anderson, Associate Professor of History at Stony Brook University. Anderson is the author of Mahogany: The Costs of Luxury in Early America and shares an Emmy nomination for the documentary, “Traces of the Trade: A Story from the Deep North.” She has advised over a dozen museums, historical societies, and community organizations on the history of slavery, including a major report for the National Park Service about Indian and enslaved African workers at the William Floyd Estate.

During the American Revolution, Long Island became dangerous and contested terrain for its civilian inhabitants.

Following the disastrous Battle of Long Island, the region was occupied by British forces for seven long years. While many Patriots joined the Continental Army or sought safety elsewhere, everyone who remained—whatever their social status or political views—was eventually impacted by the deprivations and brutality of war. Anderson will share some of the individual stories of men, women, and children who—often with great courage and tenacity—survived this tumultuous period.

Sunday, April 26, 2026

Light Refreshments: 12:30 - 1:00 pm

Lecture: 1:00 - 2:00 pm

Reservations required, please call LIMM to reserve your seat!

631-854-4974

Long Island Maritime Museum
88 West Avenue, West Sayville, NY 11796

